Director’s Notes

Twelfth Night marks the 81st play we have produced since The Rogue Theatre’s inception in 2005. Even after all of those plays, the joy of discovery in staging a new play (new to us) is still as thrilling.

Twelfth Night is a comedy in the classic sense—the play ends with multiple marriages instead of a slew of dead bodies on stage as in a tragedy. And while there are many laughs in this comedy, there is a deep strain of melancholy that runs throughout the play. The Duke longs for an unattainable love and his sorrow is reflected in the mournful song, “Come Away Death.” Malvolio’s treatment by the other members of his household borders on cruelty. Antonio’s unrequited love for Sebastian is the source of his downfall. Not everyone is happy at the end of the play. And thus, Shakespeare reminds us in the words of Feste the Clown, “Pleasure will be paid, one time or another.”

I have come to admire each of the characters in Twelfth Night—one for their wit, some for their courage, and all for their vulnerability. All of the “foolish” characters—Malvolio, Olivia, Viola, Orsino, Antonio, and Sir Andrew make a choice to love—beyond all odds or hope of requital. Their choices are courageous and nothing turns out the way they hoped. And we adore them for it.

I have also come to adore our Rogue audience over the years. Your willingness to bring your open hearts and expectant ears to the theatre always moves me. We hope you enjoy your time with us.

As Sebastian says in Act 3, Scene 3:

   I can no other answer make but thanks,
   And thanks, and ever thanks.

Music Director’s Notes

While in the sways of unrequited love Duke Orsino asks for music, the food of love, to play on. Throughout this play music shapes the atmosphere of Illyria, and for this production we are paying homage to the music of Shakespeare’s day. You will hear songs and madrigals of unrequited love, as well as instrumental music showcasing the distinct harmonies of the 16th century.

One interesting musical device that was developing in the Renaissance period is polyphony, which is the practice of simultaneously combining a number of melodies which harmonize with each other. The piece we selected to start the show, “April Is In Mistress’ Face” has very brief poetic text to it, but the individual vocal lines deliver each text strain in a staggered fashion, often repeating the line until all voices converge at the end of the stanza.

April is in my mistress’ face, and July in her eyes hath place.
Within her bosom is September,
but in her heart is a cold December.

Thomas Morley

The texts sung by Shakespeare’s clown, Feste, also bring variety to the musical styles in Twelfth Night. The script features rambunctious musical moments driving the comedy such as “I Am Gone, Sir” and “Hold Thy Peace.” Yet Feste also has a solemn side that serenades the audience with the weighty, more melancholy songs of “O Mistress Mine”, “Come Away, Death” and the “Epilogue.”

Take a moment to picture a world free from the governance of gender stereotypes. Twelfth Night shows you that world.

English playwright Ben Johnson famously described Shakespeare as, “not of an age, but for all time.” Twelfth Night, a classic comedy that puts gendered performances on display, is emblematic of the timeless nature of Shakespeare’s work. Shakespeare’s classic devices of deception and disguise blur the lines between genders and sexualities and encourage viewers to question whether such lines truly exist.

Shakespeare penned Twelfth Night in 1601 and it was first performed for Queen Elizabeth’s court in 1602 to mark the end of the Christmas season. The play’s name refers to the twelve days of Christmas, ending with the Epiphany. The festive setting of Twelfth Night lends itself to a literary style called the Carnivalesque. In this style, disparities between characters are diminished which allows anyone, regardless of class or gender, to have equal agency. Shakespeare plays upon the Carnivalesque by mingling characters from upper and lower classes, highlighting that love is not determined by social constructs but instead is an inexplicable attraction. As in the Carnivalesque, this is a world where anything is possible.

Twelfth Night predates our contemporary notions of gender. The sex binary—the idea that gender is dichotomous, masculine versus feminine—is a startlingly recent invention. Beginning in the 19th century, our “modern” institutions established an understanding of gender in terms of anatomy; they convinced us that physical differences between males and females drastically separate our minds, our abilities, and our behaviors. Understanding of gender in the Renaissance was more fluid, placing greater emphasis on our actions and behaviors rather than our anatomy. Shakespeare’s Viola—whose feminine physique and perspective bolstered rather than inhibited her performance as a male page—reflects the historic Renaissance notion (and the rising progressive notion) that gender is defined by the way we choose to present ourselves. The qualities she takes on to become Cesario break social convention and surpass the assumed immutable traits of women.

Viola shows the audience that these traits are mutable, as her more masculine self attracts the attention of both Olivia and Orsino. Olivia, who thinks she is falling in love with a man, happens to have set her sights on a woman. Orsino finds himself drawn to a man. Is he attracted to Cesario’s femininity or masculinity, or both? Perhaps it does not matter, and the play is clear in saying that gender does not determine sexuality.

Olivia also challenges stereotypical femininity by occupying a position of power that is contextually masculine. Head of her household and beholden to no man, Olivia subverts the traditional roles of men and women in courtship; she functions as the assertive pursuant in love rather than the powerless pursued. These characters reveal that gender is multiplicitous, not dichotomous, and more dynamic than anatomy would suggest.

The Renaissance construction of gender as fluid also applies to sexuality. The heteronormative world is relatively new, with the term ‘heterosexuality’ first appearing in the mainstream in 1930. Before then, as articulated by Jonathan Ned Katz, sexual fluidity was viewed as a “rather unremarkable aspect of human possibility.” In this thinking, Olivia, Orsino, and Antonio’s attraction to Viola and Sebastian requires no explanation, no pigeonholing into a gendered category of love. As in the real world, the Shakespearean characters surpass their circumstance—be it gender, class, or sexuality.

Twelfth Night not only champions that gender is learned, but class is too. Feste, the fool, jests Olivia for a living—a seemingly meager role. However, Feste quickly proves to the audience that he is highly intelligent, making us wonder, “Does intelligence really determine class status?” After meeting the drunk Sir Toby and Sir Andrew, it becomes clear that it does not. Society would have it that two men worthy of a title demanding respect would surpass Feste in terms of cunning and wit, though Sir Toby and Sir Andrew lack both and exist as the real fools in the story.

Twelfth Night may not give explicit answers to the questions it forces one to consider, but the ambiguity behind Shakespeare’s language allows one to sink into the play’s imaginary world. Shakespeare crafted a story that urges one to reflect on gender stereotypes, expectations, eroticism, and sexually charged language all while enjoying the comedy brought forth by cross dressing and entertaining innuendos.
The relationship between artist and audience is remarkable. One does not exist without the other.

PLAY-READING SERIES
2021–2022

In the Ambruster Playreading Series, we offer readings of plays that might be of interest to our Rogue audience. Each play is rehearsed by a group of actors for about 12 hours and performed with scripts in hand. Some of these plays will be fully produced in future years, and some of the plays are just interesting to hear once. Either way, you get to taste more plays each year.

Hannah Al-Baiaty (Stage Manager) is thrilled to be working with The Rogue Theatre for the first time. Hannah earned her BFA in Technical Theatre Production and Design from the University of Arizona. Her previous credits include Stage Manager for Under Construction Series: Ralph Lemon & Friends at Park Avenue Armory, Helen Simoneau Danse’s Flight Distance at Joyce SoHo, Arizona Repertory Theatre’s productions of Avenue Q and Voice of the Prairie, Assistant Stage Manager for Eugene Opera’s production of Nixon in China and Assistant Production Manager for Pipeline Theatre Company’s world premiere of Byuioo. She also spent five seasons working as a Costume Technician for The Gaslight Theatre. Hannah would like to thank the entire cast and production team of Twelfth Night for an amazing creative experience, with a special thank you to Shannon Wallace for bringing her into the Rogue community. She would also like to thank her husband, family and friends for their endless support and love. Hannah Al-Baiaty’s stage management is supported in part by a generous gift from Carol Mangold.

Shannon Wallace (Production Stage Manager) first came to The Rogue in 2015 to stage manage The Picture of Dorian Gray, and now serves as Production Stage Manager and Assistant Managing Director. Her stage management credits at The Rogue include: The Picture of Dorian Gray, The Bridge of San Luis Rey, Angels in America, Uncle Vanya, Penelope, Macheth, A House of Pomegranates, Celia, A Slave, Bach at Leipzig, The Grapes of Wrath, Three Tall Women, King Lear, Galileo, Curious Incident, Much Ado About Nothing, Secret in the Wings, The Crucible, A View from the Bridge, Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein, The Oresteia, The Weir, As You Like It and The Awakening. She graduated from the University of Arizona with a Bachelor of Fine Arts, focusing on both stage management and lighting design. During her time in school she worked on over 25 productions with Arizona Repertory Theatre. She has also worked for Arizona Theatre Company, the Oklahoma City Philharmonic, and the Contemporary American Theatre Festival. She spent a year living in Chicago and worked as the Operations Assistant for Mudlark Theater Company. She is grateful to be working full-time as a theater artist in her hometown and would like to thank her parents & her bunnies for their unconditional love.

Amy Novelli (Scenic Artist) is originally from Ohio and Pennsylvania. She received her Cum Laude BFA from the Columbus (Ohio) College of Art & Design in 1987 and her MFA from Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh in 1994. Novelli’s scenic art career began in New York City at the Macy’s Thanksgiving Day Parade Studio. Charge Scenic Artist for the Arizona Theatre Company 2010–2014, Amy also painted several sets for Arizona Opera and UA Opera, and presently paints for The Rogue Theatre and until COVID at the Arizona Broadway Theatre in Peoria (Phoenix). Amy created monstrous Halloween decor for Hotel Congress for 20 years, and was lead painter for Marshall-Fields 1998 award winning Easter Window display “Alice in Wonderland”. She supervised four public art projects in the Tucson area with high school youth and won commissions to design and paint five large scale outdoor murals across the country as well as at the Biosphere II and La Posada Hotel on Oracle Blvd. She has taught at the University of Arizona and Pima Community College. Novelli’s fine art work has been exhibited at several Tucson Galleries and in May-August 2020 she had a one woman show at the Tucson International Airport. Amy Novelli has been living in Tucson since 1996. When not painting, Novelli trains rescue horses and dogs and enjoys riding wilderness trails all over the western states.

Peter Bleasby (Master Electrician) lit his first show at 13. Professionally, he was with BBC Television for several years, and was an assistant to the UK lighting designer Richard Pilbrow during the inaugural production of the National Theatre (Hamlet, directed by Olivier.) Although his career was in architectural lighting, he maintained some theatre lighting involvement on both sides of the Atlantic. In 2009, he volunteered for the Rogue’s initial season at the Historic Y. He has been master electrician at the Rogue for every show from 2013 to the present, supporting our lighting designers Deanna Fitzgerald, Don Fox, and Josh Hemmo. He devised the system that enables lights to be quickly re-arranged, allowing more time for the creative process. Elsewhere in Tucson, he directed the technical and logistical aspects of fundraisers for the Southern Arizona AIDS Foundation, including the fashion show Moda Provocateur.
